

Museum Docent Job Description

A Museum Docent is a creative, imaginative, enthusiastic individual, who provides interpretative services to Museum visitors through guided tours and workshops, as well as special events such as family programs, exhibit openings, adult activities, and Museum Outreach programs, locally and statewide. All activities relate to the Museum's mission and collection areas. The Museum houses the largest natural history collection in the Rocky Mountains. The collections include the world's oldest documented Navajo textile and Colorado's largest collection of bees in addition to more than four million objects from the fields of Anthropology, Botany, Diatoms, Entomology, Paleontology, and Zoology.

What the Museum offers you:

- The opportunity to learn about natural history, science, and anthropology.
- The ability to gain skills in working with people of all ages and interests.
- The chance to improve your public speaking skills.
- The occasion to work with others as part of a motivated and dedicated team.
- The enjoyment of volunteer appreciation events, behind-the-scenes tours, and field trips.
- The chance to make a difference!

What the Museum asks of you:

- To attend the informative and fun docent-training class.
- To use your acquired skills in presentations and programs to the public.
- To honor your time commitment for all scheduled assignments.
- To be flexible.
